No Use to Dodge.

A considerable measure of fatalism is a great help to a soldier. If what is to be will be, why be afraid of anything?

A southern soldier describes a man in his company—"a little Dutch Jew"—as the "very incarnation of cool, impudent bravado in a fight." A consistent fatalist, he summed up his faith in one sentence, "You'll never die till your time comes."

"One day he saw me dodging a spent mine that came whistling uncomfortably near."

"Hey, Doc!" he sang out in his piping voice. "Vat's to use to dodge tenn pulets? Ter'll hit you, shunt as vell vere you is as vere you ain't."—Youth's Companion.

Unconquerable Habit.

"Isn't it a beautiful night, Clarence?" she whispered tenderly as her head reclined against his shoulder.

"Yes," replied Clarence, the barber, very absently, as he ran his fingers softly through her golden hair. "Fine night. Better have that hair trimmed up a little, though, hadn't you? Looks pretty ragged, you know, and it really needs a shampoo too."—Chicago Record.

AGAINST JOCKHECK.

Judge Hazen Decides That His Lots May be Taken

FOR USE AS A COURTHOUSE SITE.

The Judge Refuses to Grant the Permanent Injunction.

In the district court this morning Judge Hazen decided the court house injunction case against Carl Jockheck and in favor of the board of county commissioners, after having the case under advisement. He declined to grant the permanent injunction asked for by the plaintiffs.

The court room was filled with the best legal talent in the city, who were aware that Judge Hazen's decision would be an able one, embracing many intricate points of law. Judge Hazen began by saying that he had made a more thorough investigation of the points made by the various attorneys in the case than it was usual for the court to make. He continued with a recital of the facts of the case, in which there is no dispute or controversy, the matter being pure a legal question.

Judge Hazen said in part: "The plaintiffs claim that a sufficient effort was not made by the county officers to secure possession of the lots, and that only after such an effort has been made does the right to condemn exist. It is true there was only one proposition made by Mr. Jockheck, and only one was asked for. The American encyclopedia of law says it makes no difference which side makes the offer or which side rejects it, or how many times offers were made, an offer is still an offer and the principle remains the same. It is very plain that Mr. Jockheck and the county officers were unable to agree on the price."

"Second—It is claimed that the presence of many other suitable sites made it unnecessary to condemn the Jockheck homestead. This court does not deny that there are hundreds of corners in the city that would be just as acceptable to the court as the one chosen, but it does not follow that the right to condemn ceases to exist. When the county commissioners find it necessary to condemn property for the public welfare it is not for this court to inquire into their motives in so doing."

"Third—It is said that the taking of property for a courthouse is not for 'public use' within the meaning of the statutes. Judge Cooley has decided that it is, and he holds that a courthouse is just as essential to the public welfare as a schoolhouse. There can be but little question that a courthouse is necessary. I can find no decisions to the reverse."

"Fourth—They claim the law is unconstitutional because it contains more than is included in the title. The title of course must be an index to what the act contains. The title reads, 'An act providing for the condemnation of sites for county buildings.' The act also provides for the condemnation of lots adjoining the said sites. This court holds that the greater includes the less, and to put a liberal construction on it I think the title is plenty broad enough."

"Fifth—A great deal has been said with persistence and ingenuity regarding the homestead feature of the question. They claim the homestead right is sacred, and withheld from the power of eminent domain. I have not found many authorities on this subject, but it is not for this court to say that the right to condemn homestead property does not exist. I consider the homestead right inferior to the power of eminent domain. If the theory of the plaintiffs were correct, internal improvements would be forever at rest. It would be impossible with such a ruling to build roads, widen streets, erect public buildings, or build railroads or telegraph lines. The right of eminent domain is superior to all other rights. I decide this point against the plaintiffs."

"Sixth—It is agreed that there are flaws in the petition. I find on examination that the county attorney has not only made the petition faulty, but not enough to cover all the exigencies of the case."

"Seventh—They claim the price set by appraisers is not large enough. This court holds that this point is not in the case at all. When the plaintiff's attorneys withdrew their appeal and asked for an injunction the title to the property passed from them just as completely as though the actual sale had been made. It is now only a question of the amount."

"The injunction is denied."

The case will be taken to the supreme court at once and advanced on the docket as rapidly as possible. The plaintiffs will begin stay proceedings, probably, to prevent the immediate confiscation of the Jockheck property, under a stay bond to be fixed by Judge Hazen. Such a move has not been made but it is contemplated by the county attorney. County Attorney Safford handled the case of the county commissioners alone, and it is a fact which affords him a great deal of satisfaction that the court decided every point in the case in his favor, except one which it was not necessary to decide at all.

Not in the Same Place.

Johnnie Collingsworth says: "If the Capital reporter who wrote up Harry Kroft's case this morning, will come down on Seventh street I will convince him that Kroft is not in the same building with me. Harry Kroft occupies the second floor of the Sheehan building. Ferdinand Durein has been running a club No. 118 East Seventh street. I occupy the third floor in the Walker building No. 113 and 114 East Seventh street. Captain Gish knows that Kroft is not in the Walker building."
